Was Old Brown Insane?

If he was, there was certainly a method in his madness. Look at the cool deliberation Brown and his fellow insurrectionists, had than the Browns? been reading Harrist Sceeber Stowe's works and hearing Abelition speeches, they put the L.O.O.F. are hereby cautioned against the machinations of a person calling himself Samuel Brown, who says he is a member of faith in Seward a "trepresented by the stories of doctrine, and believed that the stories of cruelty to the slaves in the South were true. It is evident that they supposed that when they raised the standard of rebellion all "the oppressed and down trodden negroes" would be a covered and down trodden negroes would be a covered and the standard of the standard of rebellion all the oppressed and down trodden negroes would be a covered and the standard of the standard of the standard of rebellion all the oppressed and down trodden negroes would be a covered to the standard of the standar orandem found upon his person, he has ob-tained, since August last, about $500.

Said Brown is about $500.

They accord to inches high—no whiskers—red spots on his face and nose, small wart on the underlid of the left eye, light hair, somewhat gray, sandy complexion, rather stout built, and weight some one hundred and accounts rounds apeaks alow and deprised that he did not receive reinforcements evening train, whereby the whole country overcoat, and black silk hat. was alarmed. The insurrection was not an outbreak of 12 or 15 men, as the Republican presses try to make out, but was the un successful attempt at a regularly organized rebellion, which, according to the testimony of the ringleaders, was to extend over the Union, and had head quarters in several of ly, but that does not make them the less accountable, and is far from being a proof of their insanity. It is the first instance in the history of the country, where the "irrepressible conflict's doctrine has openly been put into practice, and every man, the whole

THEY TAKE IT HARD!-Some of the parexcellence black republicans of this city take it hard that Old Brown should have 1780, was a remurkable short day. which the bunglers-sanguine of help from their friends throughout the North, and slaves in the South-neglected to destroy.

What the Intelligent Colored Men of New York City think of the Harper's Perry Matter.

The New York "Express" dispatched one its reporters for the purpose of spending a day among the educated negroes of that city, with the view of ascertaining what they thought of the Harper's Ferry matter. "keep shady" on the subject, and it was hard to draw from them any opinion, whatever Shoemaker's Ink. in bottles of all sizes,

ALSO, The reporter found them rather disposed to on the matter in issue. Enough was gathered, however, says the "Express," to impress the mind with the fact that the colored people of New York, at least the most respectable portion of them, apprehend that "a dark cloud hangs over the Southern States on the Eastern coast." Hints were thrown out of a regular bureau being organized in that city for the especial purpose of co-operating, if necessary, with the insurgents in Virginia, and that there is some mysterious method of conveying intelligence similar to the Underground Railroad.

Some of the more cautious of the colored people condemn, or profess to condemn, the action of the abolitionists in precipitating matters to a crisis. On the other hand, there are others who go in pure and simple for the "irrepressible conflict."

They say Mr. Seward tells them, that that conflict must come sooner or later-and, if of all that be the case, they do not see why it may not as well come to-day, or to-morrow, as years hence. Among this class there up, man pears to be a firm belief that though the insurrection at Harper's Ferry has bren put down, through its premature explosion, and the activity of the Federal and State froops, yet "the end is not yet;" but that the flames lighted up in Virginia, though prematively

J. L. Weston lighted up in Virginia, though prematurely quenched, will hereafter spread through K Maryland, the Carolinae and Georgia, to the full banks of the Mississippi, carrying in its train a wide spread desolation, and resulting than in the complete emancipation of the slaves.

A BROKEN HEART,-Mrs. Saloma Schneider, the young wife of an Engineer at St Louis, on Tuesday morning awoke in her usual good health and observations. Sudredness such faltering in her guitand presently to fall on the floor in a half rectining position. She gasped for breath once or twice, and was a corpse. A post mortem examination revealed a most rare lesion; it was a rent in the heart, which allowed the blood contained in that organ to accumulate in the suc which invests the heart, and this also was ruptored. She had in a physical sense of the word, died heart-bruken.
